It was only when the plane tickets arrived for their flight to Tokyo that Laura suddenly realized what a big step this was. She had been looking forward to a new job in a new country, but now she was not so sure if she had made the right decision. She talked to Paul about it and he advised her to find out as much as she could about the country in the few weeks before their departure.

One evening he invited some Japanese friends from the office to dinner. Although he had told Laura in advance, she was a little nervous about meeting so many people from a country she had only read about. Would they like the food she was going to serve? And weren't there a lot of customs the Japanese had, which they considered very important, such as the way of greeting people? What would happen if she did something the Japanese considered not very polite? She began to wish that Paul had not invited them. However, her worries were unnecessary. When their guests arrived, they acted just like their European guests, except that they were more polite. For the first time, Laura began to relax and enjoy the conversation about their new home.

39)  Laura began to have second thoughts about moving to Tokyo.

40)  Paul suggested that Laura should invite some Japanese for dinner.

41)  Paul told Laura that the Japanese were coming to dinner.

- 42)  Laura was worried that her guests might not be polite.
- 43)  Laura and Paul's Japanese guests talked about Japan.
